SYNOPSIS

From two of the most famous Italian dishes to one perhaps more unknown. Enter the Piadina, a flatbread sandwich with various toppings found in the region of Emilia Romagna. These can be savory, such as a variety of cheeses and cold meats or sweet; the Nutella Piadina is a particular favorite amongst children in the region. Since opening in London, these Piadina makers from Rimini have been met with suspicion and curiosity.

We begin our journey by understanding the history of the Piadina. From the first evidence of the Piadina in the 1300s to the modern-day piadinerie kiosk. Why is it that it is only truly found and appreciated in one region of Italy? The cooks will also touch upon the significance of the Apennine mountains when it comes to cooking and diet. From there they will discuss where their love for the snack came from.

Perhaps a family tradition or a way of bonding with friends. One thing is for certain, the dish is a great source of regional pride; 'Nothing speaks more of Romagna than this bread of ours... it is a symbol that speaks of devotion to our land'. Again this will be intercut with footage from the in-house nutritionist. They will discuss the differences between types of bread and the effect they have on our gut and microbiome.

We will then have William Baldwin return to meet our cooks and discuss the process of making this simple yet delicious dish. He will ask the reasons as to why it never took off in other regions, how Londoners have reacted to the dish and how he creates a personal spin on the snack. The two will then eat together in the restaurant trying both a savory and a sweet version.

Throughout the episode, our focus is on unmasking the unknown cook.

Who, why and how did he come to be who he is today.

It is a documentary drama to show their flair, cooking technique and unique story, not the traditional A to B cooking show.
